Afghan Exiles in U.S. Flourish on Chicken

Afghan refugees in New York may soon be to fried chicken what the Koreans are to fruit and vegetable stands. About 10,000 to 15,0000 Afghans have arrived in the Big Apple since the Soviet Army intervened in their country in December 1979, and the city already has about 110 Afghan fast food shops, bearing such all-American names as Boston Fried Chicken, Harlem Fried Chicken and Texas Fried Chicken. Similar Afghan fast food ontlets have opened in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, California and Washington, D.C.

The man who started it all actually arrived before the Soviet intervention. Tach Zia came to the United States in 1972, got a joh with a fried chicken outfit and earned enough to buy the franchise. Now he owns six Kennedy Fried Chicken shops (named after the late president "just because Afghans like him a lot") in Manhattan, Queens and Brooklyn.

Mr. Zia employs mainly Afghan refugees and provides technical assistance to those who want to start their own fried chicken restaurants. The Afghans say the competition from the hig chains like Ken-tucky Fried Chicken is tough, but that their own chicken is special because of the spices, mainly red pepper and fresh

U.S. Is Said To Impede Cruz's Role In Nicaragua

By Philip Taubman New York Times Service WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration, while publicly criticizing the Nov. 4 elections in Nicaragua as "a sham." has privately argued against the participation of the leading opposition presidential candidate for lear his involvement would legitimize the electoral process, senior administration officials Since May, when U.S. policy toward the election was formed, the administration has wanted the opposition candidate, Arturo José Cruz, either not to enter the race or, if he did, to withdraw before the election, claiming the conditions were unfair, the officials said.

The administration never contemplated letting Cruz stay in the race," one official said, "because then the Sandinistas could justifiably claim that the elections were legitimate, making it much harder for the United States to oppose the Nicaraguan government.

Other U.S. officials vehemently denied this contention. L. Craig Johnstone, deputy assistant secre-tary of state for Central America, said Saturday, "Anyone who would allege that we don't favor full par-ticipation in the election doesn't

Mr. Johnstone said the administration had used its influence with a variety of Nicaraguan groups, ineluding rebels and conservative politicians, to try to clear the way

Several U.S. officials who are familiar with the administration's activities in Nicaragua said the Central Intelligeoee Agency had worked with some of Mr. Cruz's supporters to ensure that they would object to any potential agreement for his participation in the election.

The administration officials said that the president of the alliance, Enrique Bolanos Geyer, and other leaders of the business organization met during the spring and summer with CIA officials in Washington and San Jose, Costa Rica.

Members of the Democratic Coordinator, a group of political par-tles opposing the Sandinist govern-ment, which is headed by Mr. Cruz, and U.S. officials familiar with their deliberations, said that objections by Mr. Bolanos and the business federation played a major role in preventing Mr. Cruz from reaching agreement with the Sandinists.

Colonel James Steele, bead of U.S. military trainers here, and the two other U.S. military men flew to Perquin to observe the performance of the Atlacatl Battalion in its helicopter-borne assault Thursday at the start of a 2,300-troop offensive against northern Morazán province, one of the guerrillas' two principal strongholds, U.S. of-ficials said. Perquin is deep inside territory usually controlled by leftist guerrillas. About 100 of them, according to residents of the town, evacuated about 30 minutes before the army

According to the emhassy's "terms of reference," which have been in effect for more than two years, U.S. military personnel are to avoid being "placed io situations where combat is likely."

Limits on activities of U.S. military personnel here have been established to assuage fears in the U.S. Congress and public opinion that Americans are running risks Five U.S. military personnel are known to have been ordered to leave the country since Fehruary 1982 for engaging in activities con-sidered too close to direct involvement io combat.

SOOD PEOPLE MAKE GOOD PARYNERS

A 'War' Out of Control?

Perhaps the Reagan administration has it right about the CIA's dreadful how-to primer for waging terror in Nicaragua. Perhaps it was written by an "overzealous free-lancer." But where does that leave the agency's director, William Casey? If be approved the manual, he violated the executive orders of three presidents and negligently failed to inform the congressional intelligence committees. If he did not know what was being done in his and America's name, the verdict is inescapable that the "contra war" is ont of control.

Moving to limit the damage, President Reagan has ordered an inquiry — by the CIA. The result is likely to be a pound of fudge in self-protective wrappers. Getting the truth requires something more, preferably a full-scale inquiry by the intelligence committee of the Senate or the House into every aspect of this undeclared war - including the mining of Nicaraguan ports; the "private" volunteers and soldiers of fortune so easily recruited; that comic book with sabotage instructions, and now a manual so brutally cynical that even the coutra fighters balked at distributing 2,000 copies.

One passage of the manual urges rebels in Nicaragua to recruit criminals to bring about violence "that will cause the death of one or more people to create a martyr for the cause." Whoever wrote that did not know, or care, that Presidents Ford, Carter and Reagan have insisted that no one acting for the United States may encourage political murder.

The manual was bound to leak, as it did to The Associated Press. Open societies cannot assure the "deniability" of operations that offend principle and law. It has been true of the whole false justification of this war: that its only purpose was to interdict arms smuggling.

With an envious eye, the Hoover Commission in 1954 urged imitating dictatorships:
"We must learn to subvert, sabotage and destroy our enemies by more clever, more sophis-ticated and more effective methods than those used against us ... It may become necessary that the American people will be made a quainted with, understand and support this fundamentally repugnant philosophy."

Once acquainted, Americans rejected that anything-goes docurine. The reforms of 1976 permit covert operations, but they oblige the CIA to keep Congress informed and they set limits of decency on clandestine schemes. Only by observing those rules can the United States condemn terrorism. Secretary of State George Shultz has denounced "the extent to which agencies of foreign states are engaged in terrorist acts." Jeane Kirkpatrick, the chief U.S. delegate at the United Nations, condemns "violence in violation of law against persons who are not at war." These principles cannot be squared with political murder in Nicaragua. Having disavowed the manual, President Reagan now needs to re-examine the whole that produced it.

Sharing the Pain in Spain

A specter of austerity haunts Western Europe, greatly shrinking the distance between tories and socialists. With measures as tough as any taken by Margaret Thatcher of Britain, Spain's Felipe González is proving how much the global economic changes of the 1970s have altered politics in the 1980s.

With unemployment at 18.5 percent, Mr. Gouzalez has called on labor and industry to negotiate terms for easier dismissals and lower real wages in the next two years. Bowing to his government's popularity, half the unions have agreed. Radicals threaten defiance and strikes. Prime Minister González is trying to prepare Spain's long-sheltered industries for entry into the European Community. In a broader sense, be is joining the continental movement to regain competitiveness. It is a movement that is fast making tradi-

themselves from Mrs. Thatcher and other conservatives by packaging their austerity programs as "social contracts." They aim to offer new subsidies to displaced workers in exchange for concessions on wages, work rules and job security. These deals may well erode the Socialists' standing in working-class com-munities, but Mr. González, like Mr. Mitterrand, has recognized that there are no happier alternatives in an economically integrated world. To persist with postwar socialist programs of stimulus, full employment and nationalization would invite inflation and capital flight, thus defeating the main objective.

Europe's democratic socialists are finding that they must seek new supporters in emerging economic sectors to replace the votes they will lose in irreversibly declining industries. Whether they can make that shift and still maintain a distinctive socialist identity remains an open question.

Louisville Helped Mondale

debate between the presidential candidates; in time for the Kansas City debate oo Oct. 21, enough post-Oct. 7 polls were in to give a pretty clear answer. Just about everyone ex-cept Nancy Reagan agreed that Walter Mondale was the winner in Louisville, and the polls registered some gains for him. In the Washingtoo Post-ABC News poll, for example, Mr. Mondale rose from a pre-Louisville 37 percent to 42 percent afterward, a statistically significant difference. Also, his post-Louisville support was notably firmer. The first debate enabled Mr. Mondale to increase the size of and firm up his Democratic base. It improved the morale, and hence probably increased the turnout, of core Democratic voters.

But it did not result in massive erosion of the Reagan majority. From the end of August until Oct. 7 Mr. Reagan's percentage - the single most important result in any poll, when you have an incumbent running - oscillated between 55 and 60 percent. In most polls after Louisville the Reagan percentage was oscillat-ing in the 53-to-58-percent range.

The sensible conclusion was that Mr. Reagan's support was down, a little. That conclusion was confirmed by results in statewide polls after the first debate. But Mr. Reagan was not down to the danger zone. A candidate

Speculation can end on the effect of the first can bave 53 percent of the popular vote and win more than 400 electoral votes, as Franklin Roosevelt did in 1944, Mr. Reagan still bad the inherent advantages that accrue to an incumbent president credited with strong leadership and running at a time of peace and prosperity.

But a couple of things made the race still tantalizing. One was the second debate. The other was the fact that, aside from his 60percent-plus showings in a dozen or so states, Mr. Reagan was running pretty evenly around the country. This is good news for him as long as be keeps current levels of support.

In only a few states have his poll showings dipped below 50 percent — but those include the biggest ones, California and New York; and his showings in several large-electoralvote states are only a few points higher. Consider what happens if he falls from the 53-to-58 range to, say, the 49-to-54 range, which is where he was in polls against Mr. Mondale from February through June. At that point as many as 200 hitherto safe electoral votes are at risk. (At least 270 are needed to win).

All this speculation may be academic. But it. or something much like it, has been very much on the minds of both campaigns' strategists as they pondered the second debate and the two weeks and two days that follow. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Capitalist Rethink in China

The radical new blueprint for the Chinese economy has a significance far beyond even the one billion Chinese lives it will ultimately affect. It represents the boldest step ever taken by a major Communist country not just to coexist with capitalism but to absorb permanently all features it can safely adopt from the rival system. The Chinese leader, Deng Xiaoping, whose strong personal hallmark is stamped on the changes, has swept away

Marxist dogmas like so many cobwebs. The doctrinal rethink means a progressive reduc-tion in state subsidies, the loosening of rigid state control, with more incentives to workers and a freer rein for managers, and the encouragement on a controlled scale of private enterprise for private gain. The recent agreement over Hong Kong was only acceptable in the belief that Communist China really was gear-ing itself to live alongside the capitalist world.

Mr. Deng now indicates that to be correct. - The Sunday Telegraph (London).

1909: Moret Evicts Maura in Madrid MADRID - The Spanish Ministry has resigned. Senor Antonio Maura, the President of the Council, saw the King [on Oct. 21] and inquired whether he still possessed the mon-arch's confidence after the attacks made upon him by the Cortes and by Senor Sigismundo Moret, the head of the Liberal party. The King's reply has oot been made known, but it is easy to guess, since on receiving it Senor Maura handed the resignation of the Cabinet to King Alfonso. Not only did the King accept it, he asked Senor Moret to form a new Ministry. For the last week, the entire political world in Madrid has known that the King disanproved of Senor Maura's attitude in regard to the [Oct. 13] execution of Francisco Ferrer.

1934: Democrats Get Campaign Help WASHINGTON - A notice sent out by the Democratic National Committee [on Oct. 21] suggests that congressional candidates may exploit the expenditures of Federal funds in their districts in campaign speeches. The notice says: "The attached bulletin shows Federal appropriations segregated by departments for your state. It is believed this information will enable you to answer inquiries made constantly on these subjects. You can use this any way you like in speeches, radio talks and newspaper interviews, embellishing the facts set forth with your own views and opinions." Republicans immediately launched a vigorous attack against the move, charging that Democratic leaders are trying to bny the election.

Let the Candidates 'Talk Sense to the American People'

W ASHINGTON — Americans would be blessed beyond measure if the presidential candidates would hew to Adlai Stevenson's admonition many years ago: Talk sense.

If it is sensible to question and rethink the viability of the present Social Security system, is it possible for a candidate to say that out loud? Obviously it is not possible in 1984.

If it were sensible would a president or a candidate dare say, "I really have no answer for the problems and hostilities in the Middle East and may never find such an answer"?

A political season should test the assumptions, as opposed to the assertions, of those who seek to lead.

The United States has roughly 5 percent of the world's population and 25 percent of its wealth. Can it, with such substantial but finite resources, fulfill global military commitments that the present administration defines as meeting "any contingency" and the Democratic candidate as the defense of "American interests"? Which contingencies and interests?

If. as the candidates say, Central America is "vital" to U.S. interests, are they willing to fight for it?

There are economic assumptions not undeserving of examination. The American economy is a remarkable engine, producing a gross national product of $3 trillion. Can it, however, sustain a national debt that approaches $2 trillion and grows by nearly $200 billion annually, and at

Does it - because of the strength of the dollar abroad - continue to export jobs through the loss of foreign markets for its manufactured goods?

Such questions are the sort one expects of bookkeepers; they take no account of the idealistic assumptions that infuse many of America's poli-

This idealism, in differing ways and in differing manifestations, is expressed by both candidates. They see or would like to see an America that contributes mightily to the amelioration of poverty, hunger and social injustice at home and on other continents. does the possibility hinge on sacrifice, a word and an idea that enjoys fice, a word and an idea that enjoys little currency in the political dialogue of 1984? A Country That Doesn't Earn Its Way Puts Its Military Capacity in Jeopardy

WASHINGTON — Every nation must pay for its defense. Britain liquidated overseas assets, the investments of generations, and borrowed heavily to wage war against Germany. After the war it chose policies of current consumption rather than savings and investment. It did not earn its way in world trade and was quickly surpassed in economic strength and military potential by former adversaries. The United States is pursuing policies today not unlike Britain's after the war.

whose forced incorporation into the Soviet Union has never been recognized by the Vatican (which recognizes a Free Lithuanian Embassy), would be one more step in an attempt to extend to the Soviet Union and other East European countries the "Polish model" for church relations with the Communist Party and state.

No Communist country is better prepared to accept this model than Lithuania, where Catholicism is at least as much a manifestation of nationalism as in Poland. After 45 years of Soviet occupation and Russification, 2.5 million of the 3 million inhabitants declare themselves Catholic, and 60 percent of the population regularly attends Mass. In Lithuania, unlike the other Soviet republics, the principal clandestine newspaper is called Chronicles of the Catholic Church. A Committee to Defend the Faithful has been organized and a clandestine seminary operates full-time. The closing of cources and the jailing of priests has led to riots.

For centuries Lithuania was united to Poland. Together they brought the Catholic faith into Russia and to the Ukraine. Vilnius was Polisb between the two world wars and still bas a large Polish minority. Thousands of Lithuanians twice flocked to the Polish border to capture what little they could of Polisb television's restricted coverage of the visits of John Paul II.

A papal visit oow would come in an unfavorable context for the Kremlin. The Baltic states are going through a period of political effervescence. The Kremlin has attack Estonian nationalism and carried out a purge in Latvia. Meanwhile, the Soviet leadership is already preparing its propaganda for 1988, when it will have to face the 1,000th anniversary of Russia's Chris-tianization. The Kremlin must feel that the danger from religion is very real and that a visit by the pope on Soviet soil could only aggravate it.

The pope says be hopes to visit Lithuania one day all the same. Meanwhile he has administered an excellent lesson in politics. He knew he would not be able to visit the Soviet Union now, but also that the mere prospect of such a trip would stimulate the movement that John Paul II has great experience in dealing with Communists. He is the only leader in the West to have a coberent strategy toward the Kremlin. He knows how to maneuver so as to render unto Caesar what is Caesar's, all the while forcing Caesar to admit the power of the church as an equal in spiritual matters.

The Soviets call this ideological warfare. They lost that war in Poland. They will lose it in Lithuania and everywhere else, with or without a visit by the pope.

It is doing so not out of necessity but because of a lack of political will. America has embarked on a military buildup without paying for it out of current revenue. Instead it is borrowing $2 billion a week from foreign countries. High U.S. interest rates, the direct result of not taxing to pay for spending, extract this capital from other countries.

These economic policies damage security in a number of ways. The manufacturing base is being eroded; the technological lead is being under-mined; by curbing economic growth in Europe and Japan, relations with allies are being strained; in the Third World the cause of democracy is receiving a severe setback.

Imports are taking an increasing share of the U.S. market. American exports are faring less and less well in world's markets. Record trade deficits, announced monthly, mean that millions of American workers are not being employed or trained. There is now a documentable erosion of both basic and emerging industries occessary to national defense.

Steel-making capacity alone has shrunk 30 percent since January 1981; import dependency in steel has increased to well over 25 percent. Even this level of domestic production is maintained by a patchwork of export restraint agreements.

The telecommunications industry, in which America is the world leader in technology, has seen a sharp rever-sal in the past three and a balf years from a surplus of $1 billion to a deficit of $200 million.

And this is only the beginning. The U.S. trade gap is predicted to widen sharply unless economic and trade policies are changed.

This disaster does not occur because American workers have become less energetic or American management less farsighted or Amer-ican scientists less innovative. It results primarily because overvaluation of the dollar adds to the other problems of international competition.

In every week that goes by under present policies, U.S. firms and workers make and export nearly $3 billion trade gap causes a loss of invention of ed this article to The Washington Post.

new products and new technologies. Lost sales mean lost revenues. For every telephone system, nuclear power station or conventional electrical generating system that is not supplied abroad, U.S. firms have fewer dollars for research and development, and so they learn less about ways to unprove existing products and create new ones. More insidious still, industries do not demand as many engineers and scientists, and fewer are trained -all due to an abstraction, a currency overvaluation that prices U.S. goods out of world markets and makes imports unreasonably cheap. In the mistaken belief that it will give America lasting strength, vast borrowed — resources are being spent on military hardware. But any arsenal becomes obsolete shockingly fast. To stay strong a country needs a strong industrial base and the latest technologies, and the ability to create new products and new technologies. Current policies cannot achieve this necessary set of objectives; on the contrary, they are defeating them.

It has long been the objective of U.S. policies to promote the cause of democratic government throughout the world. America could not long survive as a single democracy in a sea of world communism.

The strongest argument for America's cause is that communism produces want and a working free mar-ket produces well-being. But U.S. economic policies are curbing growth in the poorest nations. Interest on external debt has risen to extreme levels; for the first time there is an actual inflow of capital from these poor countries to America. What is the sense of stockpiling arms while at the same time sowing the seeds of discontent and revolution that make their use ever so much more likely?

What is so tragic is that this damage to national defense oced not occur. There is no absence of the tools needed to restore bealth to the U.S. trade position, and thus the country's long-term defense posture, and to increase the oumbers of productively employed Americans and friends of America everywhere. The first step is to cut the federal budget delicit.

A Novel Presidential Fix. But Reagan May Escape

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — The presidential race has taken a an service. The voters look it over and unexpected turn. Going into Sun-day's final debate in Kansas City, the fulcrum of the election seemed to be President Reagan's capacity to make a case for himself on television. There was no historical precedent for a popular incumbent making himself the issue in the election — until Ronald Reagan bobbled his first debate with Walter Mondale in Louisville.

There has not been a presidential election in the modern era that has turned on the question of the sitting president's capacity to do his job as well in the future as he did in the past - not even when an ailing Franklin Roosevelt sought a fourth term six months before his death.

Mr. Reagan's age would never have been an issue; he is plainly fitter than most of us. But voters, especially those who are themselves approaching Mr. Reagan's age or have elderly parents, are sensitive to signs of faltering energies and faculties, and that is what some people saw in Mr. Reagan on the night of Oct. 7.
Still, all Mr. Reagan had to do in to prove that be has a better grasp, say, on nuclear policy or on Middle East politics than Mr. Mondale does. In this respect his situation was quite similar to the one he faced as a challenger in the 1980 debate with Jimmy Carter. The Democrats' strat-egy of desperation that year — since they admitted that they could not convince most voters that Mr. Carter had been a successful president was to depict Mr. Reagan as a fright-ening nuclear-bomber menace. When Mr. Carter strained to do that in the debate, Mr. Reagan stayed calm and good-natured. He won the debate in

The only elections that turn on a serious debate on future policy seem to be those in which two non-incumbents, both judged to be qualified, face each other. Reagan, Mondale Gear Up for 2d Debate

WASHINGTON — New Toreign policy developments were added to an already charged politi-cal atmosphere as President Ron-ald Reagan and Waiter F. Mondale prepared for a debate Sunday night that both sides regarded as pivotal in the presidential campaign. Their second face-to-face meeting this fall, a 90-minute session sponsored by the League of Women Voters, was to begin at midnight GMT in Kansas City, Missouri,

Mr. Reagan assailed Mr. Mondale's votes as a senator against the B-t bomber, the Trident submarine and the cruise missile in alleging that Mr. Mondale's voting record on defense issues was "so weak he ranked right next to George Mc-Govern," the losing Democratic presidential nominee in 1972.

What troubles me most is how little he seems to have learned about the dangers of weakness and naive thinking." Mr. Reagan said. "I don't question his patriotism. I do question his judgment."

Mr. Mondale repeated charges that the president was either out of touch with foreign matters or had countenanced illegal action. On Friday, he had questioned whether manual that encouraged use of ter- counseled Mr. Reagan to relax and rorism against Nicaraguan offi-iovoke his trademark patriotie

On the eve of their confrontation, the two candidates found that the list of potential debating topics had expanded beyond the expected topics of ouclear arms control, relations with the Soviet Union and military spending.

There were reports from several sources during the week that the Reagan administration had been warned in advance that the U.S. Embassy in Beirut might be bombed by Shiife terrorists.

The most recent incident was the crash Friday of an airplane in El Salvador, killing four Americans aboard. An intelligence officer said one of the four was a CIA officer and the other three were CIA contract employees.

These developments seemed to play into Mr. Mondale's plans in his attempts to undermine confidence in Mr. Reagan's leadership by pushing themes built around the question "Who's in charge?" They question "Who's in charge?" They also appeared to increase the concern of the Reagan re-election team

"If he didn't know, how could that possible has said, "We're going to let Real at the record of Reagan and the possible has said, "We're going to let Real at the record of Reagan and the said the record of Reagan and the said."

Mondale campaign officials, pressing an attack strategy aimed at shaking both the president and the voters' faith in his competence. viewed the debate as their candidate's probable last chance to overtake Mr. Reagan.

Most strategists also agreed that, although Mr. Reagan has maintained a sizable lead in the major public opinion surveys and in the private polls of both campaigns, he was going into the second debate in a far less commanding position than he had before the first debate Oct. 7.

Reagan campaign officials on Saturday blamed "negative" net-work news coverage for contributing to this impression by reporting that the president had lost the first debate and by dwelling on the age

The president's spokesmen dismissed the impact of the week's developments and also tried to head off speculation among politi-cal professionals and the press that a bad showing on Sunday could send the Reagan campaign into a

There has been no independent information about the state of Mr. Sakharov's health since he was re-ported to have started a hunger strike May 2 to press demands that his wife be allowed to go to the West for medical treatment.

Minimal information that has been trickling from Gorki, an in-dustrial city about 250 miles (400 kilometers) east of Moscow to which Mr. Sakharov was banished in 1980, indicated that the authorities may have eased the previously complete ban on communication with the couple, Mr. Sakharov was hospitalized

The apparent slight easing of the strict constraints on what the couple can send out from Gorki to their friends and relatives in Moscow suggested that the physicist had ended his fast and that he and Mrs. Bonner had resumed their life in exile as before.

Last June, Soviet officials asserted that the couple was "in good health" and that Mr. Sakharov was eating meals regularly and leading an active way of life."

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) - John A. Zaccaro, busband of the Democratic vice presidential candidate, Geraldine A. India Appears Upset With Pakistan, U.S.

By William K. Stevens New York Times Service NEW DELHI - India's relations with Pakistan and the United States appear to have deteriorated because of a series of what Indians view as provocative developments. The situation stems from these five interrelated events:

· A report from Washingtoo in late September that India was considering a preemptive strike to destroy Pakistan's nuclear plant at Kahuta.

 Another report from Washington, published in Pakistan on Oct. 5 and in lodia on Oct. 10, that the United States was thinking of bringing the Pakistanis uoder its ouclear umbrella if they gave up their nuclear program.

• A statement attributed Oct. 10 to Deane R. Hinton, the U.S. ambassador to Pakistan, that the United States would aid Pakistan if India attacked.

• A warning in Washington on Oct. 11 by Sababzada Yaqub Khan, the Pakistani Foreign Minister, that Pakistan "would bave oo alternative but to retaliate" if India attacked Kahuta.

 A disclosure in Washington, also on Oct. 11, that Pakistan wants to buy an airborne early-warning system built around the E-2C

Hawkeye plane. Although sections of the Indian press used the words "war clouds" on the report of a supposed offer of a United States ouclear umbrella, Indian officials discount it. "Rubbish," an official called the report, which has been denied by the United States. Similarly, Indian officials deny that an attack on Kahuta is being planned.

IRS Ruling Fails to Dent Heavy Demand by Investors

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS—The U.S. Treasury is gearing up to sell some $14 billion worth of securities this week, of which up to $1 billion is targeted for sale internationally, and the timing could hardly be more propitious. Late last week, the dollar boad markets were in full boom as investors rushed to buy what appears to be high-yielding paper before interest rates decline further.

Spurring the view that rates are headed down were the lowerthan-expected fall in the money supply and a bigger-than-expected downward revision in the rate of third-quarter economic growth, to 2.7 from the previously estimated 3.6 percent. The measure of inflation in the period was revised upward, a presumably negative factor for bond markets, but this news was overshadowed by the new decline in the price of oil.

By the time markets had closed last week, short-term interest rates had shed % point and Henry Kanfman, economist for Salomon Brothers, was forecasting that "further sizeable declines in interest rates would seem probable."

Just in case all this was not enough to guarantee n good reception for this week's maiden international sale of government notes, the Treasury also moved to squash the brou-haha in the Eurobond market caused by the Internal Revenue Service's ruling that nine issues — marketed in the legal noman's land between the June 22 approval by Congress of n bill eliminating the 30-percent withholding tax on interest payments and the July 18 signature by President Ronald Reagan — were subject to the tax.

Insiders report that the investment banks advising the Treasury on how to approach the Eurobond market exerted lots of pressure to get the IRS ruling reversed. The ruling was seen in Europe as unfair and the Treasury Department, to which the IRS reports, as totally oblivious to the sensitivities of foreign purchasers of dollar securities. In the end, it appeared that the Treasury was just oblivious about what the IRS was doing and hastily rushed to repair the damage. Not so hasty, mind you, as to rescind the ruling but indicating a willingness to exonerate from the withholding tax any issue that was "in process prior to June 22." Left unclear is what "in process" means — invitation telexes sent out, contract signed? — and what happens to those deals (Citicorp's $100-million issue and Ford Motor's 75-million Deutsche mark issue) that were not "in process" prior to June 22?

To these questions, Treasury officials indicate that all the companies whose issues were caught by the IRS ruling are invited to seek relief and that tax policy is never aimed at being retroactive. At the same time, they stress that the question of whether relief is given is at "the sole discretion of the IRS."

T is widely assumed that the Treasury's gesture contains real substance and all seeking exoneration will receive it. The only question that remains is whether U.S. companies who paid 13 percent and more to issue bonds at end-June will seek to use this opportunity to call those issues at par and reissue new paper bearing a much lower coupon.

The opinion of most experts is that this is unlikely. Usually, the contract clause allowing recall of issues subject to withholding tax also requires the company to first take all steps necessary avoid falling subject to such a tax. Thus, most issuers will be legally forced to seek relief from the IRS ruling. In addition, any company seen to be trying to rape investors by not seeking relief would likely be blackballed out of the Eurobond market. Further, the Treasury invited not only issuers to apply for relief but also said investors could make applications — meaning. Treasury officials said, that "individuals could start the ball

While the IRS ruling created a considerable stir, it had no impact on the rusb to buy Eurodollar bonds. Significantly, virtually all of the fixed-coupon dollar issues were structured (bearing warrants) to appeal to investors leery about buying dollars at a time when the currency appeared to be weakening. In fact, the dollar dropped sharply as a result of actual and anticipated further fall in interest rates.

Warrants, for which investors last week were asked to pay roughly $40, give holders the right to buy a $1,000, fixed-conpon bond. Most of the warrants offered last week have a life of five years - a maturity much invored since most analysts believe that over such a long span the option to buy the fixed-coupon bond at par will prove to be very profitable.

Being so listed means that a bank has a relatively high risk of failing and merits special attention by the federal supervisors to help it stay open, But Alan Whitney, an insur-ance corporation spokesman, said: "Most of these banks will not fail. They're getting intensive scrutiny and supervision, and most of them, over a period of time, will correct their problems and be removed from the list."

The number of banks on the troubled list reached the peak of 385 banks in 1976, representing 2.6 percent of all U.S. banks, before beginning to fall again. Auto Industry In Canada Turns Luck into Profits

By Douglas Martin New York Times Service

TORONTO - Canada's car industry is one of the brightest spots in the country's economy — a triumph that is in large part n matter of luck.

The gradual erosion of the country's dollar to a level of about 76 cents in U.S. currency has made exports considerably more attractive. The bigger car models made here, which Canadians complained about five years ago when gasoline prices were skyrocketing, are now best sellers. However, the strike at General Motors of Canada Ltd. by Canadian United Automobile Workers union has somewhat dimmed the near-term outlook for the Canadian industry and has caused a shortage of parts and layoffs at GM plants in the United States because of the high degree of manufacturing integration in the two countries. But even the militancy of the Canadian union does not seem so menacing to U.S. companies when they consider the currency differential and the costs savings afforded by the state medical

"The fact the companies are n success is the result of circumstances over which they've had no control," said Maryann Keller, an analyst with Vilas-Fisher Associates Ltd. in New York. "They just happen to be in the right place at the right Nevertheless, the industry's success is real enough, with production expected to reach 1.6 million vehicles this year, highest since 1979. Kenneth W. Harrigan, president of Ford Canada, has characterized the Canadian industry as being "more competitive today than we have been in

The auto industry accounts for almost n third of Canada's $719-million trade surplus. And it has helped make Canada a place of prime importance for the Big Three automakers - General Motors

Corp., Ford Motor Co., and Chrysler Corp. Chrysler makes its popular mini-vans in Wind-sor, Ontario and St. Thomas, Ontario, is the only place Ford makes two popular big car models. General Motors makes light trucks, which are hot sellers, in Oshawa, Ontario.

American Motors Corp. has announced that it is expanding its Brampton, Outario, assembly plant from 120 vehicles n day to as many as 800, more than 80 percent of which will be exported to the United States.

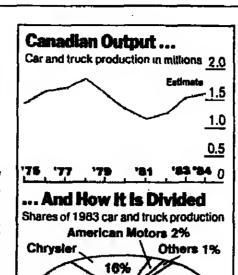

Even European and Japanese automakers also have become interested. AB Volvo builds cars in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and Honda Motor Co. is building a $76 million assembly plant in Ontario. Other Japanese producers are studying the possibility of inaking cars in Canada.

In all, automakers have announced more than $4 billion in capital spending in Canada over the last four years.

Part of the incentive is generous help from the Canadian federal and provincial governments.

American Motors is receiving $100 million in equal parts from the federal government and the province of Outario; Chrysler's successful bailout depended partly on Canadian be'p, and a deal be-tween GM and Suzuki would almost certainly receive government help, analysts say.

The rise in Canadian auto output is part of the Big Three's recovery. In 1980, they lost $3.97 billion. This year they are expected to post profits in excess of $10 billion.

That the U.S. and Canadian industry should move in similar directions is hardly surprising; the two are so tightly integrated that the industry is atinental in structure and operations.

"It's pretty much one industry," said Ann C. Knight, an analyst with Paine Webber. With the exception of 10 percent of the shares of Ford's Canadian unit, none of the subsidiaries are traded on Canadian exchanges — unlike those of other industries, such as petroleum, mining and chemi-

The situation dates to 1965, when Canada and the United States signed the Auto Pact agreement, under which Canada, in essence, produces one car for export for each car it sells at home. The pact replaced a system under which Canada made all of its own cars, no matter how uneconomic that was.

And all lines of cars had to be made in Canada, even though its population of 25 million is only one-tenth of that of the United States. The economies of scale were so bad that even Canada's 17percent tariff was becoming insufficient to make production of complete lines of cars profitable.

The result of the Anto Pact, basically a freetrade accord, has been greater efficiency. Every producer is exceeding its Auto Pact obligations.

The future of the Canadain auto industy, howevcannot be better that that of the larger U.S. industry, analysts say. And they have suggested that acceleration of the current global trend to fabricate components could sweep Canada aside even more quickly than the United States.

OPEC Ministers To Meet Today On Price Tactics

GENEVA — A group of OPEC oil ministers, vowing to defend their per-barrel charges, gathered for advance talks Monday on solutions to plunging world oil prices.

The group of six ministers, led by Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani of Saudi Arabia, planned to formulate a price defense plan to present to a full emergency session of the 13-member Organization of Petro-leum Exporting Countries on Oct.

Oil prices were cut last week by Britain and Norway, which are not OPEC members, and then by Nigeria, an OPEC member.

The cuts mainly affected light crudes, which are priced $3 a barrel higher than heavy oils in the OPEC price structure. Of the countries represented at Monday's talks, the UAE, Libya and Algeria produce mainly light crude, which is similar in quality as those crudes for which Norway, Britain and Nigeria have cut prices. Mr. Subroto said several scenarios would be discussed at the Oct, 29 meeting, including possible pro-duction cuts and a two-tier pricing system allowing Nigeria to continue with a lower price.

Asked about output cuts, Mr. Subroto said, "that is not ruled out as a way to defend the price, but there are other means to get the $29-a-barrel price to stick." Sheikh Yamani told the Middle

West German Insurer Plans to Set Up Holding Company for Diversification

MUNICH - Allianz Versicherungs AG, West Germany's largest ularly interested in acquisitions in insurer, intends to create a holding the United States, Britain, Japan company in a restructuring move designed to give it greater legal flexibility to diversify into non-insurance areas, according to the it easier for a large insurance comcompany's chief spokesman. "We are making plans to estab-

"Our intentions are firm." A move to restructure would require supervisory board approval as well as majority support at the shareholders meeting, the next of which is to take place in late De-

Rumours that Allianz was considering a corporate reshape have been circulating since early September but appeared to gather steam among investors last week, helping to lift Allianz's share price by nearly 30 Deutsche marks ($9.77) daily for the week on the Frankfurt Stock Exchange, closing at a record 1,113 DM Friday. Insolvency Said Near for Steel Firm

SAARBRUECKEN, West Germany - One of West Germany's main steel companies could be insolvent by the end of the month unless it receives fresh aid, industry and political sources said Sunday. The European Community

Commission is scheduled to decide Thursday whether to reverse its de-cision, made last month, to prohib-it 77 million Deutsch marks ($25 million) in state aid to Arbed Saarstahl GmbH. The EC earlier decided that economic funds would not make the company viable by the wants to end steel subsidies.

On January 1st, 1985 a new name goes up over the door of many bank buildings throughout Africa, Asia and the Middle East.

On that day, The Standard Bank and The Chartered Bank formally adopt the name of their parent group-Standard Chartered.

The new name over the door simply underlines the fact that Standard Chartered gives you immediate access to one of the largest integrated branch networks in the world-over 2,000 branches, in more than 60 countries.

And it's intended to serve as a reminder that dealing with Standard Chartered offers international customers some very tangible benefits-including competitive currency dealing on a 24-hour-a-day basis, and a knowledge of world markets, contacts and opportunities based on nearly 130 years of specialisation in international trade.

We can assure you that one thing won't change. The service.

And if you already deal with Standard Chartered you'll know just what that assurance can mean, in helping you to do overseas business with fewer problems and higher profits.

If, on the other hand, you haven't yet discovered the Standard Chartered difference, there'll never be a better time to do so than now.

Because we know that having a new name is faster and more efficient cash transmission, more not enough, unless we earn one as well.

PARACHUTES AND KISSES

By Erica Jong, 405 pp. $16.95. NAL Books, 1663 Broadway. New York, N.Y. 10019.

Reviewed by Herbert Mitgang

WHEN last heard from, Isadora Wing, Erica Jong's by-sex-possessed Cosmo girl who made her first appearance in "Fear of Flying," was having it all — doing her favorite zipless activity above the clouds while flying to a Freudian conference in Vienna. Now, in "Parachutes and Kisses," it is a decade and three broken marriages later. Wing has one adored child, and she is pushing 40. No matter: she is still engaged in a dozeo random romances. But while God is in Her feminist heaven, all's not right in Wing's earthy Connecticut dream world.

Io the new novel, the priapean Central Park West princess has changed her venue but not her style. She is now doing her thing on a water bed in her busbandless suburban house while her child is asleep, in motels, in friends' places overlooking Long Island Sound, and in walkup apartments featuring unmade, rumpled beds At age 39, Wing has discovered men in their mid-20s with energy levels 10 match or, with luck, to surpass her own. She especially falls for men who have read ber books. Boasting. perhaps unwittingly. Wing succumbs to those who have been educated by ber peccadilloes to print, and tell her so. Wing is one long sexual advertisement for herself.

As in "How to Save Your Own Life" (the sequel to "Fear of Flying"), the beroine of "Parachutes and Kisses" is now a popular, if not important, writer. While manhood and virility, and marriage with independence, and separation and bitterness, are central to "Parachutes and Kisses." Wing is especially taken by men who admire ber poetry and literary seriousness. To show that her behavior is not simply that of a borderline nymphomaniac — a word that would never occur to her since she considers herself to be a role model for the liberated woman - Wing constantly quotes famous authors and poets to parallel ner ideas and explain her conduct.

Philip Roth, as author of "Portnoy's Complaint," is cited reverentially at least three times. Then, too, the 400-odd pages of "Para-chutes and Kisses" (a sule derived from a poem by Pablo Neruda) are filled with references to Isaac Bashevis Singer, Voltaire, Graham Greene, Flaubert, Saui Bellow, Henry Miller, Byron, John Updike, James Jovec, Colette, Oscar Wilde, Robert Frost, George Bernard Shaw, E. E. Cummings, William Blake, W. B. Yeats, Henry Green and Shakespeare. Since she owns the story, there are long poems in the novel written by Isadora Wing herself.

As in Nora Ephron's "Hearthurn," a leaner and less pretentious novel about marital discord, Jong's "Parachutes and Kisses" limns the difficulties of a household with two homebound writers. Isadora Wing is the famous one; her busband, Josh Ace, hasn't quite made it. As Wing cattily describes their problem: she was a book chib selection, and he was never even an alternate. While all went well on their Connecticut water bed, author Ace became jealous of author Wing. Relauating. Ace decides that he wants Wing to cook his meals and spend more time as an ordinary hausfrau and mother instead of retreating to her writing

"Somewhere deep inside she believes that if she is 'nice' to Josh, if she atones for her power and success by annihilating herself in some way, then he will come back," Jong writes. "It is the old female love-work dilemma, the dilemma Isadora thought she'd solved years ago, now come back to haunt her in a new form. And nowhere does there seem to be any room at all for writing — for the kind of full blast concentration that writing requires and that has always been Isadora's center, her salvation, her solace, even her livelihood."

Trying, unsuccessfully, to recapture her husband - a rather immature and uninteresting crybaby, dominated by a famous father fsadora Wing takes comfort in Iree-lance beds. After a fling with an earth mother, Josh Ace seems to be far more monogamous with his girlfriend than Isadora Wing with her sexual roundelays. Here is the Wing the reader knows and loves - raunchy, funny, explicit, outra-

When she is not taking herself too senously. Jong's Wing is a wonderfully humorous Cen-tral Park West character. You can tell her apart from others on the bumpy Connecticut high-way of love by her personal license plate — a four-letter word for female genitalia derived from Chaucer.

Prost drove flawlessly and was never in danger of not winning the race. But he had to concede the championship to Lauda when for the first time since 1967 the driving title was decided between two teammates in the season's finale.

While Prost took the lead on the ninth lap and went well ahead of mith lap and went weil anead of the field, Lauda drove strongly to move up from the 11th starting place on the grid. Within 30 laps he was in third place, but he needed to go one better to beat Prost for the

The blues, "August Wilson writes io his drama "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom." "They bear it come out but they don't understand how it got there. They don't understand that's life's way of talking. You don't siog to feel better. You sing because that's a way of understanding life."

with "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom," which opened Oct. 11 at the Cort Theater, Wilson has written his own blues. He based his play on the blues singer Gertrude (Ma) Rainey, and he set it in a recording session in Chicago in December 1927. The language of Wilson's characters, alternately sassy and sorrow-ful, is the language of the blues, which has always been a music for crying and dancing. Ma Rainey and ber band members tell stories that blues songs have told, of sexual liaisons and Satanic possession and everyday toil. The only difference is that Wilson made his music out of sentences and syllables rather than calloused fingers trembling against guitar

In so doing, Wilson joins a chain of black writers who have been profoundly influenced by black mu-sic. Spirituals, jazz and the blues have affected the style and the content of black authors from Langston Hughes to Alice Walker, from Ralph Ellison to Charles Fuller, from Richard Wright to Ntozake Shange. Certainly, there are white artists who have felt similarly moved, such as Edward Albee in writing "The Death of Bessie Smith" or Michael Bennett in directing "Dreamgirls," but the point is that one must struggle to find a major black writer in this century whose work has not been informed by mu-

The influence runs in the opposite direction, too. In orchestral pieces like "Harlem Air Shaft" and "Black, Brown and Beige," Duke Ellington created tonal documentaries of black life. Archie Shepp, the contemporary jazz saxophonist, is also a published playwright and poet who mixes words and music in his performances. And Anthony Davis, a composer with roots in both jazz and European classical music, has written an opera about Malcolm X.

Modern black writers have repeatedly reached to music for inspiration. Ellison in "Shadow and Act" and Amiri Baraka (formerly LeRoi Jones) in "Blues People" both argued that music was perhaps the ultimate expression of Afro-American culture. "It was the one vector out of African culture impossible to eradicate," Baraka wrote. "It signified the existence of an Afro-American, and the existence of an Afro-American culture."

"Music has had to be everything for us," said Walker, who won a Pulitzer Prize for her novel "The Color Purple." It had to be encoded with a lot of the spiritual messages, a lot of the social messages that we need in every generation. That's why our music tends to be both spiritual and political. It's had to most pertinent aspects of our experience grew out of music. We learned the very language through music. The way our preachers developed was through the field hollers, the song sermons — forms that went back to Africa. Our writers, our painters, our whole artistic experience bas been informed by the musical

"There are many things about music and soog that relate to play writing," said Lloyd Richards, the director of "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom." "A play may be closer to a soog than it is to a novel. A song usually tells a story, and it tells it in a compressed way. The imagery, the putting together of language, is similar for a play and a song. The rbythm, the cadences, the immediacy of involvement."

Each form of black music offered different things to the black writer. Spirituals were among the first black art forms to fuse Western elements — in this case, the lexicon of Christianity — with the circumstances of black life. Songs about the Jews' bondage in Egypt and their deliverance into the Promised Land took oo an added resonance for an enslaved or isenfranchised people.

The power of such themes touched writers, too. W. E. B. DuBois, the black political theorist, began each chapter of his book "The Souls of Black Folk" with a quotation from a spiritual.

Walker listened extensively to the gospel singers Mahalia Jackson and Clara Ward while writing her first novel. "The Third Life of Grange Copeland." She considers Stevie Wonder a spiritual singer, rather than a pop singer, and she opened "The Color Purple" with a quote from his song "Do Like You." Another one of Walker's musical influences is the late reggae star Bob Marley, who filled his political anthems with biblical allusions.

"One of the most frightening things to me," Walker said, "would be to play a Bob Marley song for someone and have them not respond. It would signal a kind of deadness. It's oot the beat alone. There's something else - the sincerity, the conviction. It's like anything that's authentic

The blues also possessed those traits. Even a slicker, current blues musician like B. B. King writes songs about ghetto life that, said Shepp, "speak to the people, have a contact with the people, that our writers sometimes don't."

If spirituals and the blues influenced writers largely by what they suggested and implied, then jazz did so in more direct ways. Jazz surely derives from folk roots, but it is also the music of the black intelligen-tsia. Jazz is a rigorous and technically demanding music, one that deeply affected such composers as Stravinsky and Gershwin. The men and women who made jazz, at least from the bebop revolution of the 1940s onward, considered themselves artists, oot entertainers. Their compositions reflected their in-volvement in racial and political issues. Ellington wrote several "tone poems," as he called them, about the black experience in America, John Coltrane composed "Alabama" as a personal eulogy "Music may be our most evolved experience." for the three girls who died in the racially motivated shepp said. "Going back to slavery, some of the bombing of a black church. Charles Mingus's "Fa-hies of Faubus" ocedied Orval Faubus, the segregationist governor of Arkansas.

All of this made jazz musicians models of achievement and self-worth. "They represented a height-ened sense of the role model." Shepp said. "They had done it their way. Lacking a great deal of formal education, they played the white man's game, but on

Baraka, in "Blues People," argued that jazz "put on a more intellectually and psychologically satisfying level the traditional separation and isolation of black man from America."

The construction of blues somes also influenced black writers. The language was lean and economical; it used the literary devices of metaphor, allitera-tion and onomatopoeia. At one point in "Ma Rain-ey's Black Bottom," after one of Ma's musicians has told how white men raped his mother and lynched his father. Wilson has another character simply break into the blues song "Samson and Delilah" —
"If I had my way / If I had my way / If I had my way / I would tear this old building down."

Many blues musicians were themselves largerthan-life figures who could well animate a writer's imagination. "Ma Rainey's Black Bottom" had its genesis in a Rainey record that Wilson bought in

"I listened," he said, "and I began to write. My first idea was to explore the economic exploitation of black musicians. The play took place entirely in the recording studio. I wrestled with that awhile and ahandoned it. I came back to the play in 1978, and I began to hear the voices of the band members. So I decided to open the door to the hand room and see who was inside. The whole time I was writing, I was listening to records in my room. I was listening to the male blues singers — Charlie Pation. Son House because I was writing the men in the band. And I was fitt is Ma Rainey incarnate."

trying to write honestly, to aquire the force of the Blues singers like Bessie Smith and Ma Rainey were touchstones, particularly for black women writers. Beyond their success as artists and entertainers, they possessed the stuff of great literary characters. They were proud and tragic, indomitable and ex-ploited, and they cast a jaundiced eye at men.

"When I started working on 'The Color Purple," Walker said, "I was listening to a lot of Bessie Smith, Ma Rainey, the women on the 'Mean Mothers' album. I loved the way they dealt with sexuality, with the relationships with men. They showed you had a whole self and you were not to succumb to being somebody else's - as they would say - 'play toy. Those singers also reminded me of the women in my own life. When I was growing up in Georgia, I had aunts who worked as domestics all week and on the weekends transformed themselves into femmes fatales. They had this energy and bravado to live a fuller life than the one society had planned for them. And when I see a picture of Bessie Smith on one of those ornate sofas with feathers all around, I know she must have been the same way."

■ 'A Searing Inside Account'

"In 'Ma Rainey's Black Bottom,' the writer August Wilsoo sends the entire history of black America crashing down upon our heads," wrote Frank Rich of The New York Times in his review of the play. "This play is a searing inside account of what white racism does to its victims - and it floats on the same authentic artistry as the blues music it celebrates. Harrowing as 'Ma Rainey's' can be, it is also funny, salty, carnal and lyrical. Like his real-life heroine, the legendary singer Gertrude 'Ma' Rainey, Wilson articulates a legacy of unspeakable agony and rage in a spellbinding voice. . . . Theresa Mer-

Presidential Parrhesia

By William Safire WASHINGTON — "Forgive me." President Reagan began recently, "but judging from the re-cord of those who are philosophicord of those who are printed phi-cally or constitutionally opposed to what we are doing, we might be better off consulting astrologers about what the deficit will be in Earlier in the campaign, be said about the Democratic candidates: Forgive me, but their 'new realism' seems to begin right where their old ideas left off."

Again, in rebutting critics of the volunteer Army, the president began, "Forgive me, but those are the same people who were wrong oo inflation, wrong on unemployment and there they go again."

Students of the presidency like Steven R. Weisman of The New York Times, who called this pattern to my attention, are wondering what Reagan is getting at. Why is he constantly seeking forgiveness?

The answer is that Reagan is a parrhesian. No, this does not mean that he comes from Paris; parrhesia, emphasis on the he, is a word rooted in the Greek for "frankness free-speaking," and its general meaning is "boldness in speech." In rhetoric, however, parrhesia has a specialized meaning: "warn-ing of potential offense, and asking pardon in advance." It is similar to the announcement by the television anchor, "Portions of the following mny be offensive to children" (though the kids lap it up and the only offense taken is by adults).

The technique has long been used by skillful orators and studied by rhetoricians. (I use rhetoric in its old sense, "the art of effective per-suasion," rather than in its new meaning of "showy and empty oratory; bloviation.") In 1586, parthesia was described in this way: "when by winning of curtesie to our speech we seeke to avoide any offence therein, as thus: Pardon if I be tedious." A better definition was offered by Edward Phillips in his 1678 New World of English Words: "in Rhetorick it is a figure in which we speak boldly, and tree-

In Henry Peacham's 1577 "The Garden of Eloquence," the Reagan technique was presaged in this de-notation of the word: "Parrhesia, when speaking before them whom we ought to reverence and lear, & having something to say which either toucheth themselves or their friends, we do desire them to pardon our boldness.

The example given is from the Roman orator Cicero, who began a speech with: "I speak with great peril, I fear, Judges, after what sort you will take my words...! pray and beseech you that if my speech be either bitter or incredible unto you at the first bearing, yet that you would accept it without offense, neither that you will reject it before I have plainly opened it unto you." Or, in modern dress, "Forgive

HOW to Raise a Street Smart Child" is a book by Grace Hechinger, which is published by Facts on File and subutled "The Complete Parent's Guide to Safety on the Street and at Home." (That possessive is troubling; apostro-phe-smart grammarians prefer either o parent's guide or the parents' guide.) At the same time, Bantam Books offers Mark McCormack's "What They Don't Teach You at Harvard Business School," subti-tled "Notes From a Street-Smart

Executive." The origin of sweet-sman is shrouded in the mists of urban slang. To speculate: a colloquial variant of to be smart is to have the smarts: I recall using street smarts as a noun applied to big-city politicians in the 1950s. I suspect the byphenated compound adjective was formed from that noun. A related noun, used in business, is street sense. The term that is in the Webster's New World Dictionary, the Merriam-Webster Ninth Collegiate and the American Heritage Dictionary is streetwise. This is defined along the lines of "able to cope with life in crime-ridden urban neighborhoods," but the only people who say streetwise these days are officebound lexicographers; out in the back alley, where the books are shipped and the ripoffs and instant-remaindering take place, street-smart is used. Grace Hechinger catches the built-in class defiance in the word when she defines it this way: "A street-smart person, large or small, may not know which fork to use, but will know whether to stay and fight or run away."
